NIGERIA'S RAPIDLY GROWING YOUTH POPULATION: A BLESSING OR CURSE?

According to a 2014 UNICEF report titled Generation 2030 / Africa, Nigeria's population is on its way to reach 440 million people by 2050, with youth (under the age of 35) expected to account for 60% of this and one tenth of all births in the world in this country.

During a discussion last month in Cape Town, South Africa, a number of Africa-focused business leaders shared whether they thought Nigeria's huge youth population would be a blessing or a curse. Here is what they had to say.

(A) Massive workforce a gift

One argument is that a large youth population means a large workforce, able to spur economic growth.

"I think it has to be a gift," said David Marsh, a manager.

However, to benefit from this young population, Marsh believes Nigeria needs to invest in job creation and education.

"I would say three things. Firstly, make sure that the people coming back from universities or jobs in the United States or Europe are integrated into society, in a very useful way. Secondly, make sure the centres of education in Nigeria are [...] up to standard. Build some really good world-class universities, although obviously you can't do that over night. And, thirdly, help these people run their own small business." Sectors such as information and communication technology (ICT), tourism, agriculture and infrastructural development have the potential to provide significant economic opportunities for young people.

(B) Lack of opportunities a burden

However, not everyone is as optimistic. Nigeria's economic growth has slowed considerably while the poverty level in Nigeria has increased from 28.1% in 1980 to about 70% in 2013. This is partly a result of high unemployment, lack of basic infrastructure especially electricity, bad economic policies and corruption.

Bola Onadele, a CEO, worries that the country could be burdened by its large young population, because the population is growing significantly faster than the economy and unfortunately, that is going to continue.

Ed Cropley, boss for a sub-Saharan Africa news agency, agrees.

"I would like to think that it would be a gift, but I think it is unfortunately a curse. If you look at the migration crisis in Europe now, of all the people that turned up in Lampedusa in Italy, off the coast of Libya this year, one in five of them is Nigerian.

What is the goal about?

(to) ensure → sicherstellen
contaminated → verseucht

- ▶ They want to ensure* water access and sanitation facilities for all BECAUSE...
- ▶ Access to water, sanitation and hygiene is a human right
- ▶ Lack of water and hygiene affect diseases and many children under the age of 5 die
- ▶ Around 1.8 billion people globally use a source of drinking water that is contaminated*
- ▶ 2.4 billion people have access to basic sanitation services

How can we achieve it?

awareness → Bewusstsein, Aufmerksamkeit

- ▶ organizations should work to keep governments invest in water research and development
- ▶ Generating awareness* of these roles
- ▶ get involved in the World Water Day and World Toilet Day campaigns

cli.M.at Hi guys,
Today we want to talk about transportation. I'm sure you often use the car quickly. Or fly on vacation every year. But have you ever thought about how harmful this is to the environment?
Here are our suggestions to reduce this.
• ride by bike instead of by car
(For example, you can rent bicycles with an app at)
• Travel by public transport such as subways or busses
(E.g. with the 49€ ticket)
